

ABSTRACT

A system and process for transferring pen data between unmanaged and managed code is described. The system uses shared memory between an unmanaged component and a managed application to store information relating to ink information. A pointer is transferred to the managed component, thereby allowing the managed component to read the information in the shared memory.